Rev. Dr. Tongs, DD., LL.D., is the happy possessor of a nice boy, who has followed early in his father's footsteps. They are on exhibition this week at the Model Store, where their owners will be happy to exhibit them.

Moses Tyler, of Geneva, seeing the account which Jim gave, in our last week's paper, of the big vegetables grown there, concluded to tell people what could be raised on Geneva sand, so he brought to our office, a rutabaga weighing nineteen pounds, and a carrot weighing four pounds, both raised on his place. Her children presented her with a purse of $25.

Married, in Grand Rapids, Mich., on Thursday, November 2d, 1882, Mr. Bangs F. Warner, of this place, and Miss Clara T. Bray, of Grand Rapids. The fair bride is a member of the fraternity of printers, and we extend our congratulations to the happy couple in friendly greeting. May they always have a fat take; may nothing occur to their cup of happiness, or put a . to their joy; may the * shine propitiously on their married life, and their proof sheets be without errors; may they never lack plenty of quinos for their necessities, for that will only make love's fond — the sweeter, and may whatever works they produce, be revised and improved, and bear upon their faces the imprint of their authors.

The executive officers of the Horse Fair Association licensed a wheel of fortune, a "chuck-luck" board, and a soap-peddling swindle, and they piled their traffic unmolested on Friday, and Saturday forenoon. In the afternoon Sheriff Van Anken was on the ground, and complaint being made to him by some of the foolish ones who had been bitten, he took two of the gamblers into custody, and compelled them to disgorge about two hundred dollars of their ill-gotten gains. J. G. Miller and E. S. Harvey, the president and secretary of the association, objected to the Sheriff's action, claiming that as they had issued licenses to them he had no right to interfere. Van Anken, however, maintained that their license did not legalize what the statutes declared a fraud, and held on to the rascals until they returned the money to their victims.—Bangor Reflector.

Don't fail to read Mrs. Porter's new ad.

J. M. Longwell will return home and take charge of the Dyckman House, on the 15th.

Prof. Dickey, of Albion College, will lecture on temperance, at the Court House, on Saturday evening next. He preaches at the M. E. Church on Sunday morning, and speaks on educational matters in the evening.

The most contemptible fraud that has disgraced our village for a long time, was the swindling game run during the fair, in J. G. Miller's new store building. A large canvass partition, covered with advertisements of the scheme, was stretched across the middle of the room. Back of the partition, at a little window, sat the chief manipulator. Sticks of candy the size of lead pencils were sold at five cents each, six for a quarter or thirteen for fifty cents. Inside of some of the papers in which the candy was wrapped were little slips of paper, calling for ten cents to five dollars. One of a half-dozen ropers-in would occasionally make a purchase, draw a prize and set the silly crowd of young men and boys wild with a desire to invest. Little fellows of ten and twelve years old invested their nickles and dimes, and of course drew nothing. We imagine that the fathers and mothers of these youngsters will give small thanks to the parties who are responsible for permitting the swindle to be carried on.—Bangor Reflector.

The Judges Salary Amendment.

From the Kalamazoo Telegraph.

The proposition to amend the constitution of Michigan by increasing the salary of circuit judges from $1,500 to $2,500 is to be voted on Nov. 7th. The chief danger is that will be either ignored or thoughtlessly voted against. The only important objection so far urged against the amendment is that the management of the public business in the courts is not satisfactory; that it is too often loosely conducted or influenced by considerations affecting the emoluments of the attorneys and not for the dispatch of their clients' business. When such a state of affairs is allowed to exist it necessarily renders the use of the law so expensive and inefficient that it is avoided wherever possible. The disagreeable fact that this condition does sometimes grow up is alleged as a reason why the court should not be treated in a more liberal manner. The argument is—let the courts reform this business, and then they will deserve better treatment in the salary question. This is just where the public interest is set "wrong end to." The inefficiency of the courts, where they are inefficient, is directly caused by the poor pay of the circuit judges. Their salary of $1,500 annually is cut into by the large traveling and living expenses consequent on their being away from home and incidentally by the mode of living which their social position enforces on them. Their net income for family and personal outgoes, and for keeping abreast of their business, is inadequate. Good talent can do better in private professional engagements and the business of the public, as a rule, drifts into the hands of inferior men. Inferior men give us inferior management. The people of this circuit are just now experiencing the profit of having a thoroughly competent court, but our experience is exceptional. The public interests oftentimes have to contend against private interests employing the very best services, and are more than liable to be worsted in such cases. The remedy is simple, for the public is better able than anyone else to have the use of the most competent services, if it only will. A good judge is vastly cheaper for public ends than an inferior man. Therefore, if the people of Michigan will stop to see the reach of their action in this case, treat it as a business proposition and a question of getting the most for their money, they will adopt the amendment by a large majority.

We get some excellent men on the bench under the existing plan, it is true, and young members of the bar who have the elements of coming distinction can perhaps afford to accept a position on the bench for the standing thus obtained. But there is always more or less uncertainty about keeping them through their term, and the same in the case of any other superior judge.

The administration of the courts ought to have the best character, the best ability and the best business capacity. The proposed change of judges salaries from $1,500 to $2,500 is in the interest of more vigorous, more economical management of the business of litigation. It more than doubles the net income of the judge, although adding but 67 per cent to the public expense.

This State has more judicial districts than are actually necessary. With courts managed by able men, who have capacity for dispatching business, we could get along with less circuits and less judges, and the increased salary would thus be partially saved. But better judges Michigan must have. The demand for more efficient courts is peremptory and the amendment ought to be adopted without opposition.
